

Did Kelly's foulmouthed bashing of her ex make her look like the bad guy?

Kelly Osbourne took to Twitter on Christmas Day to slam her ex-fiancé, Luke Worrall. In a series of cuss-laden posts, she even used the C word!, Kelly wrote that he'd slept with "100's of girls as [well] as men behind my back." (Luke's since deemed her rant: "lies.")

We asked the experts: Was her tirade justified, or did it backfire and make her seem even worse than Luke?

Kelly called off her wedding to Luke in July 2010. And she took a break from Twitter not long after her vent session.

It was counterproductive

Airing your dirty laundry in public opens you up to all kinds of ridicule. Somebody could ask how she didn't know he was using her and how she could have fallen for such a star-kisser. This rant makes her seem very unaware — and difficult, too. Other men might look at her Twitter bashing and think, "Who needs this?"

And, swearing or no, ranting isn't classy. Look at Sandra Bullock! The best revenge is doing well. The opposite of love is not hate, it's indifference. The more Kelly can be indifferent about this character, the less she will be connected to him.

Women will rally behind her

Cussing out your ex in a public arena like Twitter isn't something I would ever recommend. But I don't think people will judge her more harshly than they'd judge the man who supposedly cheated on her.

So many women have been cheated on — something like 70 percent of men cheat — and they feel totally alone. They'll look at Kelly and rally behind her. It will be like sisters banding together and saying, "This is not acceptable. A guy's not going to cheat on us without consequence."

WE CAN'T STOP TALKING ABOUT...

...how much trouble Russell Brand must be in since Tweeting an unflattering, bare-faced pic of his wife, Katy Perry, to the masses on Dec. 31. Oof. The honeymoon's so over.

...the news that Marc Anthony, a.k.a. J.Lo's hubby, is allegedly $3.4 million behind in his taxes, and the fact that this isn't the first time he's owed: In 2007, he paid $2.5 million in back taxes, too. Dude! It's called TurboTax. Look into it.

...Kim Kardashian. We can't decide what's more surprising: the fact that she got to make a music video with Kanye West, or the cornrows she wore while doing it.

Do we have to call them Kornrows now?
